

Abstract

The invention relates to a method for structuring components in aircraft gas turbines, the components being manufactured by means of molded cathodes and electrochemical machining methods. According to the invention, a structure that minimizes boundary layers is produced on the surface of the components by means of structures existing on the surface of the molded cathodes.